“The Orchid and the Dandelion - why some children struggle and how all can thrive”, published by Knopf in 2019, written by W. Tom Boyce, a pediatrician researcher and co-director of the Child and Brain Development Program at CIFAR (Canadian Institute for Advanced Research) with Marla Sokolowski for the past 11 years.

This book is about the differential susceptibility hypothesis - orchid and dandelion kids - written for a lay audience. Boyce begins with a personal history of his own family and weaves the science into the narrative.
